Internal Study Cites Problems Of Management

By Richard Bernstein New York Times Service

PARIS — A group of present and former UNESCO staff members has prepared a report containing sharp criticism of the way the organization is run.

The report charges that the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization's programs suffer from duplication and overlapping, unsetisfactory guid-ance and a failure at top management levels to coordinate activities.

The report, "The Critical Analy-sis of the Program," seems to support some of the criticism of UNESCO's management techniques by the Reagan administra-tion, which announced in Decem-ber that the United States would withdraw from the organization at the end of this year unless basic changes were made.

The study, compiled by 21 pre-sent or former UNESCO officials, was commissioned by the organization's director general, Amadou Mahtar M'Bow of Senegal, at a meeting of the 51-member executive board in May.

At that time, Mr. M Bow commissioned five studies on various aspects of UNESCO, including personnel practices, budget and methods of program evaluation, in compiled by an internal working munism in Central America.

group.

The four reports involving outside experts have been made public but the internal study has not been officially circulated. A copy was made available by sources un-friendly to Mr. M'Bow.

Diplomats who have seen all five documents said Friday that the four studies made public by L'NESCO were less critical than the central by the internal group. .

South African Bishop Fears More Violence

JOHANNESBURG - Bishop Desmond Tutu, a leading South people have suffered — African elergyman, said Friday he by do have grievance... feared that the violence that swept black townships this past week would spread to other areas.

Bishop Tutu said the South African Council of Churches, of which he is general secretary, had many people were killed or injured in the three days of rioting. The Education Minister Gerrit Viljoen official toll is 31 dead and 50 in-

He blamed rent increases for sparking the looting and arson in townships around Sharpeville, 30 miles (48 kilometers) south of Johannesburg. Similar increases were virtually certain in other townships, he said, and this could cause further disturbances. A magistrate on Friday banned weekend protest meetings in the Johannesburg area, saying they might threaten the public peace. Included in the ban were all gatherings to commemorate the death in detention of a black leader, Steve Biko, seven years ago, those to discuss the deaths of recent riot victims and others to call for the release of detainees. As Bishop Tutu prepared to meet Cooperation and Development Minister Piet Koornhof in an attempt to resolve grievances in the townships, a three-month-old conflict between gold-mine owners and black miners came to a head. The employers said they had made their final offer on pay to the Na-tional Union of Mineworkers, whose members at five mines are "Many of the shareholders have dived in and established that in America you can truly create a workable research consortium," Mr. Imman said recently. "But others," he added, leaving back and flashing a broad smile, "others are siming back and sipping with a long straw."

From the first, the participants, who have grown now to 18, including the Eastman Kodak Co. and the Lockheed Corp., made bold promises to fully support the project.

But MCC officials acknowledge that many of the companies have balked at surrendering their best researchers and ideas to a venture that would help their domestic opposition as well as themselves. Some companies reportedly offered incentives to keep their top engineers from joining MCC. But many of the experimental venture's shareholders now say that the worst may be over.

"These are the problems I guess we had to expect," said Michael F. Magnire, senior vice president of the Harris Corp. and a director of MCC. "None of us have done anything like this before. But now things are picking up, and we are very encouraged."

Some of the corporate sponsors complained that, without their own staff members at MCC, they would have trouble transferring technology back to their own laboratories. MCC did not challenge that claim. Instead, "we told them they had only one chance to get their best people in the projects," said George Black, a Radio Corp. of America executive who is an MCC vice president.

And all of a sudden, we started getting better applicants from the companies." When antitrust problems seemed to threaten MCC, it was Mr. Inman who obtained a green light from the Justice Department and then lobbied Congress for a bill to case restraints on research consortiums.

When it became clear that MCC would need the resources of a major research center, it was Mr. Inman who persuaded the University of Texas to speed expansion of its computer sciences department in return for locating MCC in Austin.

Finally, it was the former deputy director of Central Intelligence who presided over the sometimes acrimonious debate over exactly which projects MCC should pursue. In

Irish Consul in Amman Shot to Death

DUBLIN (AP) - Ireland's honorary consul in Jordan, who investigated the death of an Irish-born stewardess and the alleged false imprisonment of another, has been found shot to death at his home in Amman, the Irish Foreign Office said Thursday.

Emmanuel Jack Sabella was shot through the head Aug. 29, a spokesman said. He said Amman police were investigating but "there is no indication his murder was linked with his position as honorary consul." Mr. Sabella a Jerusalem-born insurance agent in his early 50s, had been asked earlier this year by the Foreign Office to investigate the January shooting death of Patricia Harte. 23, in her Amman apartment. the spokesman said. She was a stewardess with Alia, the Jordanian national airline. He reported that the shooting was accidental. A man charged by Jordanian police with causing death by a careless act was found guilty and sentenced to three months in prison.

More recently, Mr. Sabella investigated a claim by another Dublinborn Alia stewardess that she was imprisoned in a basement in Amman for 10 months. The woman, who name was withheld, said she was starved and drugged by a man and married to him in a ceremony she could not emember. Her parents brought her back to Ireland after investigations by Irish police and Interpol.

The spokesman said the Hong Kong government had accepted the invitation but the composition of the delegation had not been decided. He said the invitation was extended by Xu Jiatun, director of the Hong Kong bureau of Beijing's official Xinhua news agency.

Hong Kong will revert to Chinese sovereignty in 1997 when the British lease on most of the territory expires. Britain and China plan to sign an agreement on Hong Kong's future later this month. Both countries have said that the agreement will preserve the present lifestyle of Hong Kong's 5.5 million inhabitants for 50 years after 1997.

SANTIAGO (WP) — Thousands of Chileans marched from the poor neighborhoods of Santiago to its cathedral Friday afternoon to honor a French priest killed in three days of national protests. The government of General Angusto Pinochet reacted with both threats and conclisation. Government officials sought to avoid a confrontation with the Roman Catholic Church over the shooting of the Reverend André Jarian. They continued to deny reports by witnesses that Father Jarian was shot by police, but they also promised church and French Embassy officials a full investigation.

Meanwhile, the authorities dropped initial attempts to halt Friday's march and Mass and lifted censorship imposed Tuesday on two church-supported radio stations. On Thursday, President Pinochet had said protest organizers would be prosecuted and that police and intelligence service activity would be stepped up for future demonstrations.

New York City, whose five boroughs were joined together in 1898, has been put asunder by the telephone company. Brooklyn, Queens and Staten Island have a new area code: 718. Manhattan and the Bronx retain area code 212.

The phone company said the new code was needed because it was running out of numbers. Predictably, there have been complaints. Columnists bave portrayed 718 as "tacky," noting that chic places such as Washington (202), Chicago (312) and Los Angeles (213) have low-number codes, while high numbers turn up in northern Kansas (906) and Council Bluffs, Iowa (712.)

The idea that a telephone number can convey social sta-tus is not new. Twenty years ago, when telephone exchanges had names, Butterfield 8 was considered New York's most exclusive local exchange. Not coincidentally, John O'Hara made it the title of a novel about Manhattan's rich people. Today, be would have to call his book "288,"

Mountains of Food In Miles of Aisles

Vast warehouse stores, at least twice the size of conven-tional supermarkets, are only the most dramatic innovation in the latest wave of change to sweep the retail food industry in the United States.

Products are displayed in open cartons or even in bulk in huge cracker barrels. Prices are low and the stores often are open 24 hours a day. First cousin to the warehouse stores are so-called superstores, offering more service and a larger selection of products,

Yet another variation is the so-called combination store, also aimed at busy consumers who want to do all their buying in one place. They put an even greater emphasis on nonfood items and services such as lunch counters, pharmacies, film processing and liquor sales. After the warehouses, they are the fastest-growing of the industry's new formats.

At the same time, the traditional supermarket is being squeezed from the other side with the proliferation of small gourmet outlets. The trend to-ward single households and two-income families has increased the demand for huxury items such as truffles and paté, with prices to match.

WASHINGTON - The House of Representatives has voted imanimously to approve a bill to make lower-priced generic drugs more widely available, saving consumers an estimated $1 billion over the

The bill also provides the manti-facturers of brand-name drugs with increased patent and marketing protection, incentives that the pharmacentical industry has argued are critical to encourage development of new drugs.

The bill, which passed the Senate in a nearly identical version by a voice vote on Aug. 10, was adopted by the House on Thursday by a vote of 362 to 0. The result of months of negotiations, it had the support of the brand-name phar-maceutical industry, the generic drug industry, consumer and labor groups, and the administration. President Ronald Reagan is expected to sign it.

Provisions of the bill would allow more rapid approval of generic versions of some of the best-selling pharmaceutical products in the country, including the tranquilizer diszepam marketed as Vallum, the diuretic Dyazide, the cardiovascular drug Inderal and the pain reliev-er ibuprofen, a prescription drug known as Motrin which also is available over the counter as Nu-prin and Advil.

At the same time, it would provide up to five more years of patent protection for new brand-name drugs. Drug manufacturers had fought for extension of their 17year patent, arguing that the time consumed in getting regulatory ap-proval to market a drug cut into the period that it could be sold with winte riouse compound. Like most government programs, bomb smilling has grown since the Secret Service began with six dogs. "We now have 24 canines," says a service spokesman. "They work different shifts." "This bill will do more to contain the cost of health care than any-thing the Congress has done this year," said Representative Henry A. Waxman, a California Demo-crat and the principal anthor of the legislation. "I think this is the most important consumer bill the Con-gress has adopted this session."

Differences in the House and Senate versions remain to be worked out, but a Senate Labor and Human Resources Committee spokesman said the committee that affects millions of people.

The bill would increase the available causes progressive memory loss ability of generic drugs by making and confusion.

The research also may lead to for generic versions of patented greater knowledge of the complex drugs approved since 1962. Gener-ways memories are stored and reic copies of drugs introduced before 1962 could win approval from the U.S. Food and Drug Adminis-tration without complete retesting of the generic copies. The fact that the accelerated procedure was not available for drugs approved since 1962 effectively insolated many best-selling drugs from competition from generics.

going to keep smoking marijnana even though Nancy Reagan told his teen-age daughter she should urge him to give up the habit. "It's none of Nancy Reagan's business," Mr. Sturmer said after Mrs. Reagan offered the advice and some private words of encouragement to his daughter, Sabra, 13.

During a visit Thursday by the First Lady to an elementary school class on drug abuse prevention, Sabra told Mrs. Reagan that her father, who is divorced, smokes marijuana "all the time." Mrs. Reagan later advised Sabra to "stand hard" and to tell her father to quit smoking mari-

But Mr. Sturmer, who owns an auto repair shop, said be had no intention of giving up marijuana, which be contends is less harmful than alcohol and should he legalized.

As for Mrs. Reagan, Mr. Sturmer said, "I don't care for her one bit in the first place, or any of the rest of the Reagans."

In an appearance at William Knight Elementary School, Mrs. Reagan, who is active in programs to fight drug abuse among young people, also took part in a series of skits in which students pretended to be pressuring her to drink or take drugs.

U.S. Business Group Acknowledges Giving 'Hit List' on 4 Agencies

By David Hoffman and Dale Russakoff Washington Post Service

WASHINGTON - The U.S. Chamber of Commerce has ac-knowledged that it provided the White House in 1981 with a list of "unsympathetic" Carrer administration holdovers to the Environmental Protection Agency and three federal departments - Labor, Energy and Justice.

Many of the 18 officials targeted by the chamber were civil servants theoretically protected from politi-cal dismissals or demotions. One was later forced out when he refused an undesired transfer, while others said they were pressured to others remain to the government.

The chamber released the list and associated documents after they were demanded by the House Energy and Commerce Committee chairman, Representative John D.
Dingell, Democrat of Michigan, who led last year's congressional investigation of the EPA. One issue in that investigation was whether the administration improperly politicized the agency.

Mr. Dingell said earlier this week that he had evidence that the White House had forwarded a chamber "hit list" to the EPA and sources said he suspected that there were hit lists for other agencies.

The congressman said Thursday that "the hit list of long-term career employees" sent to the White House personnel director by the chamber "raises serious questions of legality." Many of those whose names ap-peared on the hit list said in inter-views Thursday that they did not know at the time that they had been singled out by the chamber, one of the country's most influential business lobbying groups. Some said they were puzzled about why they were on the list and others said they were pleased. The list targeted 10 EPA officials, six Labor Department officials, and one each in the Justice

The documents show that the "hit list" was welcomed at the White House by Wayne H. Valis, who was then an aide to President and Energy departments.

litical director at the time, writing a covering memo that was made public Thursday:

There is a great deal of concern on the part of a number of our allies about Carter administration holdovers whom the business community feels are unsympathetic."

"I certainly hope something can be done about this," Mr. Valis said. He also sent Richard L. Lesher, the chamber's president, a copy of his note with a handwritten notation, "We try to please."

"I'm honored to be an enemy of the Chamber of Commerce," said Anthony Roisman, a former Justice Department lawyer who prosecuted hazardous-waste violations and now heads Trial Lawyers for Public Justice, a firm that brings suits against government and industry. Mr. Roisman, who was singled out for harsh criticism by a chamber official, said he quit the Justice Department in January 1982, when he found that be had no waste cases to prosecute.

"I'm really pleased to be in such good company. The people on the list were some of the best in the agency," said Barbara Bankoff, an EPA political appointer who was fired by the former administrator, Anne M. Burford, but rehired after William D. Ruckelshaus took over the agency.

"I think it was pretty stupid of them to put me on the list," said Roy Gamse, former deputy assistant EPA administrator in charge of economic analysis, now director of strategic planning for a private corporation, MCI. "Certainly within the agency I was seen as one of those who was on the side of weighing the economic impacts of regulauon, rather than advocating purely the tightening of regulations

Mr. Lesher sent the list to E. Pendleton James, who was then White House personnel director, in August 1981 after complaining at a uncheon about the Carter officials.

The chamber documents show, as did disclosures in the EPA scandal, the close ties that Reagan administration officials maintained with industry groups. The administration has argued that it has changed its policies substantially since the departure of Mrs. Burford Ronald Reagan. Argentina Hyperinflates

Argentina is now sliding into genuine hyperquestion is whether the International Monebeginning to be similar to those from Germany sions to Argentina, to help a new and strugafter World War I. There is the same air of haste bordering on panic, with people snatching up their wages and rushing out to spend them on almost anything before prices rise again. By the time the German hyperinflation reached its climax in late 1923, factory workers were being paid twice a day and a newspaper cost 200 billion marks. The price level was something over a trillion times the 1914 level.

Things have not reached that point yet in Argentina. At least theoretically there is still time for the government to bring inflation under control. But the chances for success are fading as the spiral accelerates. The inflation rate is now around 25 percent a month, which means nearly 1,500 percent a year.

The political reality behind this inflation is the vehement struggle between the government and the Peronist labor movement. When the government came to power less than a year ago it unwisely promised to keep wages rising faster than prices. That initial error underlies its inability to impose restraint. The unions called a one-day general strike last Monday to press claims for still faster wage increases.
In the United States, attendon continues to be fixed on Argenuna's foreign debts. The inflation. The stories from Buenos Aires are tary Fund ought not to make special concesgling democratic government in a bad time. The answer, unhappily, is that any concessions on debt repayment now would be wasted. The next installment on the debt is not the central threat to Argentina's economy. The central threat is a profound internal imbalance that has badly frightened Argentines and generated a massive and continuing flight of capital. This outward flow aggravates the debts and makes repayment more operous than ever. Most of the foreign loans to Argentina in the past few years have done little but finance this capital flight. The economy is being progressively and rapidly stripped of capital as Argen-tines work frantically to get their money to New York or London. It is economie development in reverse, and it is apparently uncontrollable as long as the inflation persists. Standards of living are declining. The unions strike in protest, demanding remedies that can only make the inflation spin faster.

There is much goodwill in the United States toward the embattled Argentine government. But foreign support cannot help much until the government acts to restore some degree of internal stability to the country.

Yes, Recovery — and Then?

Thanks to Reagan policies, President Reagan says, Jimmy Carter's long winter of infla-tion and recession bas given way to a springtime of stable prices and economie growth.

There is no disputing the political truth in that metaphor. Many Americans credit the Reagan administration for the current economie symshine and seem unconcerned by the distant clouds of big deficits and Third World debt. But it is worth recalling what Mr. Reagan did and did not do for the economy, and how his policies are likely to affect the future.

When he took office, unemployment stood at 7.4 percent and inflation at about 10 percent. In mid-1981 came a deep recession that bottomed out after the 1982 congressional elections with 10.8-percent unemployment and virtually no inflacion. The Democrats gained seats in Congress; not two years ago, people were talking about a Reagan failure. Then a recovery as dramatie as the preceding decline took hold, and now unemployment stands at 7.5 percent. The economy is growing rapidly. There is little inflation.

Who should get the blame for the recession—and the credit for the recovery?

It is not surprising to hear Robert Ormer, a Reagan-appointed economist in the Commerce Department, say that Carter administration mismanagement led to the terrible inflation of the late 1970s. Then, he says, the Federal Reserve Board, egged on by President Carrer, tightened credit and caused the 1981-1982 recession. He says that the Reagan tax cuts produced the subsequent boom. But the story is more interesting than that. True, the Carter administration failed to contain inflation, leaving the job to the Fed: True, the Fed's policies created a deep recession. What is debatable is how much Reagan policies have contributed to the inflation-free recovery, and also how well those policies will serve the economy in the long term.

Tax cuts and 12-digit budget deficits certainly fit the Keynesian prescription, pouring purchasing power into a weak economy. And Mr. Reagan certainly lowered wage expectations with anti-union policies, dramatized by the firing of striking air controllers. Bm most of the credit for controlling inflation must go to the Fed. It was the Fed's wrenching recession that convinced business that the govern-ment was serious about prices. The Fed is still controlling inflacion, with tight money to counterbalance the Reagan fiscal stimulus.

This mix — the president's fiscal profligacy and the Fed's monetary stringency — is hardly a dependable formula for stable growth. It causes the high interest rates that suck in $100 billion a year in foreign capital that supplements domestic savings, which would otherwise be entirely absorbed in funding the deficit. And the present mix raises the value of the dollar, keeping the prices of imports low.

But high interest rates have also placed a crushing burden of debt service on poor countries. And the U.S. economy has been made increasingly vulnerable to the vagaries of international finance. At the very least, an exodus of capital could create a burst of inflation. At worst, it could wreck world trade,

Mr. Reagan has talked a lot about supplyside initiatives and cutting government down to size. But be has behaved like a Keynesian pilot with the throttle set at full speed ahead. His overdose of tax cuts, coupled with credit austerity from the Fed, did rocket America out of a recession without inflation. The question now is whether Mr. Reagan — or anyone else — can maneuver the economy back to the ground without a crash landing.

A Kremlin Rebuff to Japan

Former Minister Yoshio Sakurauchi's visit to the Soviet Union last week as head of a parliamentary goodwill mission was largely unproductive. If it proved anything, it was the futility of trying to promote friendly relacons with that giant Communist neighbor.

During his four-day stay in Moscow, Mr.

Sakurauchi patiently explored ways to improve strained relations. Perhaps he had some reason to expect a better dialogue with Moscow. Earlier. Soviet leader Konstantin Chernenko had spoken of a desire to develop Russo-Japanese ties, It is true that, in the absence of a broad agreement between the two superpowers to promote dialogue and work out confidence-building arrangements, as well as nuclear arms control measures, any attempt to improve Tokyo-Moscow relations can only be ineffective, if not useless.

Americans and Foreign Policy

The presidential campaign having just begun, it may be premature to complain about the absence of foreign policy issues from the candidates public discourse. Yet it would be sad if Americans were deprived of an open debate about the policies conducted in their name. For all the gaudiness of an election campaign, and no matter who wins, the very experience of a debate about American actions abroad remains a safeguard for democracy. The most significant difference between Washington's war in Indochina and Moscow's war in Afghanistan is that Americans were able to conduct a public protest against their government. Andrei Sakharov was muzzled and confined to exile in Gorki when he condemned the invasion of Afghanistan. In his conception and conduct of foreign policy, President Reagan has demonstrated damaging incompetence. Americans are less secure than they were four years ago and they have more cause to be worried about the fu-ture. As Walter Mondale and Geraldine Ferraro journey around the country, they are likely to find out that the American people care very much about the nuclear arms race, Central America and the Middle East.

- The Boston Sunday Globe.

Years of bellicose rhetoric have made a large section of middle-class white Americans highly bawkish. Naturally, the right-wing Republicans are expecting to reap a rich harvest of votes. Perhaps the thought behind this belligerent posture is that the Soviet Union, fearful of the economic consequences of having to match the Americans, will meekly come to the table and take its medicine. If this is so, it shows that the American president is woefully unaware of Russian attitudes and reactions.

The society has received a telegram from Commander Peary announcing his success in reaching the Pole: "Have won out at last. Pole is ours." The federation's order came from its president, William Green. President Roosevelt's mediation board of three started to grapple with the situation with little indication that would make much progress, as more mills closed and as the swelling ranks of the strikers appeared to be growing more orderly. Today's Arms Game Needs Modern Rules

THE HAGUE — 1 called the North-South problem embittering (IHT, Sept. 7). In contrast, the East-West problem is challenging. Its solution requires originality.

It is above all else a problem of the two superpowers, whose overarmament policies are influenced only feebly by other countries' policies — as was so clearly stated by Alva Myrdal, former chairman of the UN Disarmament Commission, in The Game of Disarmament: How the United States and Russia Run the Arms Race."

Unfortunately this policy of the superpowers has not contributed to world security but to a high degree of world insecurity. The goal of international policy with the highest priority by far is to stop the armaments race and to reduce armament The view of the present U.S. administration that the necessary negotiations should be conducted "from a position of strength" is a fallacy because it is logically impossible for both parties simultaneously to be in a "position of strength." It is a fallacy also because each superpower's military capacity is one of overkill; both are able to kill the world's population many times over. That the American people elected in 1980 and will probably re-elect a government that wants a "position of strength" may be the consequence of their lack of experience of a war on their territory. NATO's acceptance of this starting point may be due to the lack of experience by Western Europe of a nuclear war. Here only Japan can testify — but its experience must be multiplied by so large a factor for "technical progress" that it fades.

With all the doubts we may have concerning the aims of the Soviet Union, we must understand its suspicion vis-à-vis the United States. America is the only country that has used a nuclear bomb. In addition, most of the qualitative "improvements" in nuclear weapons have been introduced by U.S. forces. To be sure, suspicion in the opposite direction is justified as well: What is the Soviet aim in the Horn of Africa and in Afghanistan?

The fundamental challenge in the problem of the arms race is that we do not yet understand the impact on security of weapons that cannot be used.

It is to the medical profession's credit to have made clear to the public that medical aid would not be available after a nuclear attack. In contrast, it is a grave omission on the part of the economics profession that it has not set out the negative economic consequences of warfare.

For too long, economists have regarded war as a subject outside their purview. They should point out that warfare is economically far worse than any sort of bad economic policy. Its impact on human welfare is thousands or millions of times worse than that of an economic depression. If it is a Military activities are the best example of an endeavor in which development is not improvement, and in which economies of scale do not increase production and satisfaction but do increase destruction and suffering. We devote a rising share of productive forces to such activities.

Nationalism — the main ideology used to moti-vate soldiers — is strengthened by the fact that the Earth is populated by so many different peoples with different languages. The simpler people within each nation are especially unable to make themselves understood in another nation, and this creates a feeling of alienation, adding to tensions.

Socialism from the start opposed nationalism and summoned "proletarians of all countries" to unite. But it is significant that Communist leaders, when the Soviet Union was invaded by Hitler's armies, could not inspire their soldiers only by the "defense of communism." Because most of the soldiers were from peasant families, which were not always so favorably impressed by communism, the leaders also had to use patriotism as a uniting force. Similarly, American soldiers could not be asked to defend capitalism; most of them were workers. So they were summoned to fight authoritarianism — to fight for freedom and democracy.
World War II was called the great patriotic war. Patriotism is a virtue when it means loving and, if necessary, defending one's country against aggression. It is not a virtue when it means arrogance, or violence toward other nations. This development of war activities into some-thing spreading mass suffering and unhappiness gradually brought into existence various types of peace movements. Among them are religion-based movements (such as Pax Christi, the international Catholic peace movement, supported also by non-Catholics) and policy-oriented movements (such as the Pacifist Socialist Party in the Netherlands).

In some Western countries pacifists are permitted to replace military service with civil service. Recent developments in nuclear armament have strengthened and expanded these movements. In today's missile debate their role and that of some governments, such as the Danish and Dutch, is misunderstood. As we already have pointed ont, a discussion in terms of power equilibrium hardly makes sense: The heart of the matter is that the armaments race must be ended. Because traditional thinking and traditional military policies have not been able to accomplish this, unorthodox thinking and policies are needed. This unorthodox thinking is required of both sides.

How Could KAL 007 Be So Lost?

By Tom Wicker

N EW YORK — The depressing complicity with government into which the free American press has sunk since Vietnam and Water gate has seldom been more visible than it was on the first anniversary, on Sept. 1, of the Soviet destruction of Korean Air Lines flight 007. American headlines and airwayes.

of course, fully reported the Reagan dministration's statements that the downing had boosted U.S. standing in the world relative to that of the Soviet Union. But the press effectively ignored an authoritative article in New York weekly The Nation (dated Aug. 18-25) establishing to a reasonable certainty that numerous agencies of the U.S. government knew or should have known, almost from the moment flight 007 left Alaska, that the plane was off course and headed for intrusion into Soviet airspace above some of the most sensitive Soviet military installations.

No U.S. agency, military or civil-ian, warned the crew or tried to guide it out of danger. Nor did Japan. As recently as Aug. 28, in an anniversary briefing, a State Department spokesman said that "no agency of the U.S. government even knew the plane was off course and was in difficulty until after it was shot down."

If that is true, concludes the author of The Nation's article — David Pearson, an authority on the Defense Department's worldwide military command and control system, who spent a year researching his article then "the elaborate and complex system of intelligence, warnings and se-curity that the U.S. has built up over decades suffered an unprecedented and mind-boggling breakdown."

But Mr. Pearson shows in exerneiating detail why it is most unlikely that there was any such "simulta-neous failure of independent intelligence systems" operated by the navy, the army, the air force, the National the army, the air force, the National Security Agency, the CIA or Japan's Self-Defense Agency — all of which, be demonstrates, had the ability to track flight 007 at various stages of its journey across the Pacific.
What is the alternative to the staggering idea of such a breakdown? That all these agencies deliberately chose not to guide the airliner back on a safe course, because its projected overflight of the Kamchatka Penin-sula and Sakhalin Island would activate Soviet radar and air defenses and thus yield a "bonanza" of intelligence information to watching and listening U.S. electronic devices.

Despite all administration protests to the contrary, the Pearson evidence raises this alternative at least to the level of a high probability. Mr /Pearson does not assert as a fact that the United States or South Korea or both deliberately planned an intelligence mission for flight 007. He concedes the possibility that its crew blundered into sensitive Soviet airspace, and that electronic onlookers for the United States decided on the spot to take intelligence advan-tage of his error — never dreaming that the Russians would shoot down an unarmed airliner. But if the disaster happened that way, Mr. Pearson points out, then two experienced pilots (nearly 20,000 flying hours between them) not only made an error in setting the antomat-ic pilot but "sat in their cockpit for five hours, facing the autopilot selec-tor switch directly in front of them at eye level, yet failed to see that it was set improperly." Nor in all that time could they have used any of the radar and other systems available to them to check their course and position. Mr. Pearson presents substantial evidence that Soviet radar detection and communications systems over Kämchaika and Sakhaim were being jammed that night, which would help account for their documented difficulty in catching up to flight 007. He reconstructs electronic evidence, too, to show that the airliner changed course slightly after passing near a U.S. RC-135 reconnaissance plane; otherwise it would have crossed Sakhalin far north of the point where $ Soviet fighter finally shot it down.

The jamming and the change of course, as detailed by Mr. Pearson, strongly suggest what he obviously fears — "that KAL 007's intrusion into Soviet airspace for from hing. into Soviet airspace, far from being accidental, was well orchestrated, with the Reagan administration, at some level, doing the orchestrating. Even if not, the deliberate silence or the shocking failure of so many U.S. detection systems argues that President Reagan and the security establishment have greater responsibility for the fate of flight 007 than they admit or then a completent they admit - or than a compl press has been willing to seek. The New York Times.

Since the Spanish civil war, France has looked on Basque nationalists in France as political exiles deserving protection. Terrorist acts carried out over the border were tolerated both for this reason and as the price for quiet among France's own Basques. LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

South Africa's Elections Regarding the editorial "South Afri-can Shamocracy" (Sept. 4):

It is a fact, thoroughly reported by your newspaper, that intimidation and other illegal means of discouraging people to vote played a major role in the recent Colored and Indian elections. Not solve a count indian elections. Not only an active boycott campaign, but systematic breaking up of election meetings and physical threats to voters are proof of this.

What you fail to point out is that the right of individuals or groups not participate in the elections was recognized throughout; boycott meetings took place openly all during the election campaigns without hin-drance. On the other hand, several election meetings were broken up by pro-boycott groups using intimida-tion and provocation. These means of discouraging people to vote generally play an important role in politically less-developed communities.

It is therefore not strange that an unusually high proportion of voters cast special ballots, especially in constituencies where the intimidation factor was strong — as for example in Lenasia, where twice as many people voted by special ballot as voted at the polling station on election day. The fact that so many people took special steps to cast their votes and avoided voting in public is a strong indication that participation would have been much higher if intimidation and physical threats had not occurred

Therefore, the mere fact that a person did not vote does not mean that he or she rejects the new system. Besides, many other factors such as apathy, limited experience in election campaigning and organizational, fi-nancial and logistical problems experienced by political parties also played an important role, as you well know in the United States in connection with the black vote.

There is another odd feature in the editorial. In the years when the black peoples were progressing constitu-tionally, it was said that the South African government had no answer to the problem of political rights for the Coloreds and Indians. Now that the new constitution makes a dramat-munities, it is said that the black people have been ignored.

The facts point in the opposite direction. The government does realize that certain problems remain unre-solved. For this purpose the Special Cabinet Committee on Black Constitutional Development was set up in 1983. Since the beginning of 1984 the committee has already met man times with black leaders of all politi cal persuasions to work out a formula which will provide for an evolutionary process of planned change.

Every 12 hours: A new mainframe computer, running under the Siemens operating system BS 2000, goes into service in Europe.

MISH

The more widely distributed an operating system is, the more advantages it offers. This is common knowledge among computer users, and the reason is obvious: it is more worthwhile to generate software for an operating system with many users. And by the same token, a wide range of software gains more users for the operating system.

Freedom to grow

The Siemens operating system BS2000, currently in use in many parts of Europe, not only encourages such a development, but also guarantees any investment made in software products. When an enhancement of computer facilities, or simply an increase in computer power, is made, software investments are only safeguarded if the operating system remains the same. This is the point about BS2000; it covers the full performance range of our state-of-the art 7-500 series of general-purpose computers, a total hardware program of 10 different models, from medium-sized machines for new installations to the very largest ever developed and produced in Europe.

Real efficiency

BS2000 is also widespread because it is efficient. Diebold, the American statistical research organization, has determined that BS2000 generates 40 percent lower operating expenses than other comparable operating systems, whether staff, system maintenance or training costs.

There are currently over 2,600 computer installations running under BS2000 today. A base of this size, with its daily increasing number of users, demonstrates quite clearly that for BS2000 the future is already here.

Locals Skeptical About Reunification And Just Seek 'Neighborly Relations'

This prim Hessian border village of halftimbered houses gets its electricity from next-door East Germany, and the fluctuations in current have a tendency to slow down Mr. Höll's

Aside from the anomaly of its electricity supply, an arrangement that anteclates the postwar division of Germany, Wanfried and Mr. Höll, a 66-year-old former school director, have little to do with East Germany. At first glimpse, this seems strange, since Wanfried is situated on a panhandle that pokes right into East Germany, which en-velops the village and its wheat fields with a metal wall, barbed wire, jeep patrols, watchtowers and

Josyf Slipyj, Ukrainian Cardinal, 92, Dies in Rome

VATICAN CITY - Cardinal Josyf Slipyj of the Ukraine, 92, one of the last surviving leaders of religious resistance in the Soviet bloc during the era of Stalin, died Fri-day without fulfilling his dream of becoming Ukrainian Catholic pa-

Cardinal Slipyj came to Rome in 1963 under a Vatican-Moscow accord after spending 18 years in la-bor camps and under house arrest in the Soviet Union. It was understood that the Vatican had agreed to keep Cardinal Slipyj ont of sight for the rest of his life.

In the postwar period, Cardinal Slipyj became a symbol of religious resistance in the Communist bloc, along with Cardinals Stefan Wys-zynski of Poland, Jozsef Mindszenty of Hungary and Josef Beran

After Pope John XXIII won him his surprise release from the Soviet Union, Cardinal Slipyj lived quiet-ly in the Vatican. But he proved to e an awkward guest.

In occasional sermons outside the Vatican he spoke his mind. More than once he referred to his release as "so-called freedom" and yearned for the day that he would be able to return to the Ukraine.

In 1945 Cardinal Slipyj, appoint-ed archbishop of Lvov the previous year, was arrested along with 10 other Ukrainiao hishops oo charges of having cooperated with Catholics The previous year, Pope Paul the German occupiers.

After the war the Soviet authorities suppressed the Ukrainian Catholic Church, an Eastern Rite that had returned to unity with Rome in 1595, and forcibly incorporated it into the Russian Orthodox Church.

Cardinal Slipyj was sent to labor camps in Siberia and other areas of the Soviet Union, and later spent two years under house arrest near Moscow, His release followed direct contact between the Vatican and Moscow after church officials had discussed his freedom with observers from the Russian Orthodox Church at the start of the Second Vatican Council in 1962.

in 1964, the ocwly elected Pope Paul VI appointed him to the Vatican's Congregation for Eastern Churches and elevated him to be a cardinal in 1965.

As part of Pope Paul's policy of trying to improve the lot of Com-munist bloc Catholics through qui-et diplomacy, the Vatican felt it imperative that Cardinal Slipyj keep a low profile.

U.K. Miners, Coal Board Decide to Remain Silent On Strike Negotiations

LONDON — The two sides in the six-month British coal strike refused Friday to comment about their talks after acrimonous public exchanges threatened to undermine the negotiations.

A spokesman for the National Union of Mineworkers said the talks would take place Sunday at a secret venue, but the two sides would say nothing about them. The silence ends three days of usual public posturing in which the leader of the miners, Arthur Scargill, and the chairman of the National Coal Board, Ian MacGregor, traded insults on television. Three-quarters of Britain's 180,000 miners are on strike over plans to close loss-making pits. Mr. Scargill says only exhausted ones should be closed. Picket line violence, a regular feature of the dispute, continued in various parts of England, with the police arresting 39 strikers who hrew firecrackers, rocks and paint in attempts to stop colleagues from returning to work. Meanwhile, the two-week national dock strike, called after non-union workers unloaded a cargo of imported coal blacked by dockers in support of the miners, halted more than one third of Britain's freight traffic, other than petroleum, on Friday.

Coal industry sources held out little hope for the latest talks, the first since July, saying the two sides were as far apart as ever.

Mr. MacGregor and the coal board, backed by the Conservative government, say the loss-making mines are a drain on the economy and a burden on the taxpayer.

Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher, who has repeatedly refused to intervene in the dispute, discussed the strikes Friday with inisters directly concerned.

Dr. Joel Grossman, the chief archaeologist, said the excava-tion accurately established the shoreline of lower Manhattan in the 1640s. The island's coast has been extended from two to four blocks since then with landfill, he said. The artifacts were found about eight feet (2.4 meters) below street level.

Remains of four buildings, including one of three ware-houses used by the Dutch West India Co., were uncovered along with ceramics, pipes, bas-kets, barrels and other articles from the early settlement, Dr. Grossman said, The Dutch acquired Manhattan in 1626 but surrendered it to the British in 1664.

AN AMBASSADOR OF JAZZ IS HOME TO PLAY

Montpolier. VT 05602. US jazz, wearing their tuxedos. There is Bassist Percy Heath, known for his impeccable taste and timing. There is Connie Kay, more a colorist than a timekeeper, perched behind an array of drums. Before him stands Milt Jackson, perhaps the foremost vibes player of his day, looking stern, angry, as he plays. And to his right, at the piano, is John Lewis himself, his features fixed in a quizzical half-smile, his fingers tripping effortlessly through his next sophisticated solo.

After seven years of silence, the Modern Jazz Quartet is back. In the '50s and '60s it made music history as one of the most innovative, widely admired and welltraveled small ensembles around Eperhaps the best," according to Critic Martin Williams). The MJO substituted a disciplined grace for G Member of CFF the staged jam sessions of the day, and it drew excited legions AA: Sorang All branch of converts from classical and contemporary music to hear it smearer $55 Cr. & Good : blend Bach and bebop into a hard new brand of thinking man's jazz. As the group's planist and princiand the second pal composer, John Lewis became a sort of internationally known statesman of style, rarely spending time at his East End Avenue home in New York.

In 1974, when the MJQ called a HANNE HANNE Halt to It all, Lewis Called And Hard Reference to be with his Yugoslavian line to the wife, Mirjana, and two children, and to teach at City College's the state of the s OROUGH COLLEGOavis Center for Performing Arts. This time, Lewis insists, will be different. "We're not doing the constant traveling anymore, and the pay is better," he says. Still, his schedule seems hectic enough. This summer he traveled to Iceland and later appeared at the Kool Jazz Festival's tribute to Count Basie. Summer also brought the release of Echoes, the MJQ's first album in ten years. Lewis continues to spend his afternoons in the classroom at City College. And for six evenings this month (September 11 to 16), he is also appearing with the MJO at the Blue Note in Greenwich Village.

Soft-spoken and succinct, placid of countenance and manner, Lewis is more than a little modest: for all his time in front of crowds, he is almost painfully shy in person. "I am very shy," Lewis concedes, "but not when I'm performing. I love to perform."

ewis was two months old in 1920 when his family moved from Illinois to New Mexico. His stepfather was an optometrist, and his mother, who died when John was four, sang opera. Lewis' grandmother forced piano on him when he was seven, and though he first tried to escape the lessons, he wound up playing professionally by the age of 12.

By 17, Lewis had his own dance band ("dance band or jazz band, it was all the same then") at the University of New Mexico, where he studied music and anthropolbe too much. Twenty-two years ogy. Then, in his senior year, came the bombing of Pearl Harbor. By January he was in the Army for a four-year stint in Europe. "You didn't think much about what you were going to do afterward, because you weren't sure you'd come back," Lewis says. "But I played in the Special Services afraid you'd miss something."

After the war Lewis finished his education at the Manhattan School of Music. He also worked in some of the nightclubs on Fifty-second Street. His big break came in January, 1946, when Kenny Clarke showed Dizzy Gil-band, and met Kenny Clarke in an entertainment unit." An innovative drummer, Clarke was helping to create the modern jazz style that came to be known as bebop. He spurred Lewis' ambitions, but the younger man was already thinking that jazz could be something beyond dance music. "I knew it in 1939, when I heard Duke Ellington play at a dance," Lewis says. "His music was too exciting to dance to. You'd be.

Tor those who missed the era of the great luxury liners and for those who didn't, but still mourn their decline-a pleasant reminder is waiting on East Fifty-fourth Street in New York in the form of the restaurant Prunelle.

The sophisticated art deco interior might well have been lifted intact from a first-class salon of the old French Line. (In fact it was created last year by New York Designer Sam Lopata.) The sleek, buried maple walls are the color of pale caramel and serve as the backdrop for a glittering mirrored bar, lush carpets, comfortable silk-upholstered chairs and stylized flower arrangements with such 1930s blooms as anthurium and bird of paradise.

No doubt Prunelle's co-owner, Normandy-born Jacky Ruette, revels in this luxurious evocation of maritime grandeur. An accomplished sailor himself, Ruette crossed the Atlantic alone in a 30-foot sailboat in 1979 and once worked for the French Line. (His other abiding passion is skiing, and as the guiding spirit behind the annual International Chef's Ski Race, he has helped to draft Teammates André Soltner of Lutèce, Seppi Renggli of the Four Seasons, Gerard Uhrik of Bistro-Bordeaux, Bernard Herrmann of La Réserve and Michel Fitoussi of 24 Fifth Avenue.) Ruette and his partner, Chef Pascal Dirringer, are familiar to East Siders for their other restaurant, La Petite Marmite.

After almost a year Prunelle is still just teetering on the edge of wonderful If the menu lacks a Please turn page bit in wild innovation, it is also blessedly free of culinary cliches: the goat cheese stays on the cheese tray instead of turning up in all the other cuurses. And if there's any fault in the preparation, it stems more from timidity than excess: a generous, rosy circle of "Pâté Alsacien aux Trois Fois," bordered with aspic and garnished with haricots verts, was served too cold for its flavor tu emerge; perfectly cooked Hawaiian prawns were beautifully presented in a basil butter sauce but lacked the flavur of the herb; a thin fillet of salmon with mustard sauce could have used a tad more zip; a vegetable tart was, again, perfectly made but rather bland.

Of course the good side of 1imidity is restraint, and along with its superb technique and fine ingredients Prunelle has a wonderfully light hand with sauces-and with portion size as well. Among its total successes: excellent lamb; an haricots verts salad-the beans precisely cooked-in a balanced and subtle shallot vinaigrette; a grilled chicken with an unobtrusive raspberry vinegar sauce; irresistible shoestring potatoes; a classic confit of duck with fragrant herbs, crisp skin and no fat. The menu changes twice a year and is supplemented by at least two daily specials-one meat, one fish. The duck confit and a cheese soufflé-the two most popular dishes-are always available, even though they don't appear on the spring/summer carte. All desserts, as well as the good bread, are made in Prunelle's kitchens and manage to avoid contrived silliness. Ruette and Dirringer offer, instead, homey Please turn page gastronomy—are all adept at the sort uf attention that has generally gone the way of the 15-cent bus ride. Occasional lapses—a wrong appetizer on a fairly quiet night, a wine list that didn't appear until it was asked for twice—are all the more noticeable because they are so rare.

Ruette and Dirringer are challenging New York's best French restaurants.

cart, something many restaurants—even top-class ones—will not attempt, as it involves meticulous care and more than a little loss of revenue. Prunelle's cart offers an excellent selection.

The wine list tends heavily toward very expensive French vintages, although there is an adequate choice of bottles priced around $20.00. The house wine is good, and available at $14.00 a carafe or by the glass at $4.50. Ruette says he used to have more than the current five California offerings, but his domestic wines were bought mainly by French visitors. He claims that the demand for domestic wines has fallen off now that the franc is nut favoring French travel here.

At this moment Prunelle is a restaurant with so much going for it that one wants it to be consistently terrific. Furthermore, with a fixed price luncheon of $26.00, a dinner tab of $42.00, and hefty supplements for caviar, smoked salmon, dessert souffles and the like, it should be terrific.

Ruette says he opened Prunelle because, as much as he loves La Petite Marmite, "it is like being in a corner." He freely admits that he wants to prove he's as good as his midtown neighbors and friends. Well, it takes the nerve of a downhill racer and the determination of a solo sailor to challenge the big French boys-the La's and Le's-on their own turf. But when you think about it that way, Jacky Ruette, with the help of his confrère Pascal Dirringer, may be just the man for the job. -Pat Brown or months it was only a whisper. A lot of closed-door meetings. A lot of secret phone calls. A lot of self-restraint on the part of the few people who knew. Then the Getty Museum broke the silence with a bang. For a rumored $20 million it had bought more than 18,000 photographs of major historic importance. Virtually overnight, the Getty could boast one of the largest collections assembled in

The collection purchased in that heady hour is actually nine private collections combined. It includes the 4,000 prints gathered by Arnold Crane in Chicago and the 6,500 gathered by Sam Wagstaff in New York. It will feature the largest selection of Nadar vintage prints in the world, more Julia Margaret Camerons than anycollection in North America, more Le Grays than anywhere in France and a selection of August San-> extraordinary. Extraordinary museum, he says. Extraordinary collection. Extraordinary good fortune that he has. landed the job as its curator. After 14 years directing the Metropolitan Museum's department of prints and photographs, Naef has packed up his family, found a house in California and snatched up the Getty's offer. "Think," he savs with a spiritual gleam in his eve, "how many people are ever asked to do something like this." Naef is a cool, professorial man with sandy hair, glasses, and a grin he tries to hide. "When I was informed," he says conspiratorially, "of the scope of this undertaking. I could see it would rank with the most important eventsnot just in the history of photography but in the history of modum museology." Naef says he can lind little to compare it to. "You'd almost have to go back to the · 17th century," he muses happily, when Louis XIV asked Cardinal Mazarin to gather all the pictures in the realm." The Getty's, in short, was not an offer that Naef felt he could refuse-despite his ties to the Met. "New York is my home," he says a bi wistfully. "And the people at the Met are my closest friends and most respected colleagues. The is my bosom. To think of learing was not easy at all. It is a wonderful, wonderful place, and why one gives up something like the can't really be answered ratichally. But I think it goes beyond temples: one wishes to be able to work with something that is beyend being simply a symbol." Nacf also puts it another way: 'h just one hour," he says, "John Valsh [director of the Getty] spent hore on acquisitions than I spent i 14 years at the Met."

der's work that rivals the National Gallery's. But those are just the major highlights; the minor ones would make any museum curator gloat: Man Ray, Paul Wolff, László Moholy-Nagy, Walker Evans, Hippolyte Bayard, Sir. David Brewster. To put it into perspective, the size of the Getty's new collection is roughly ten times that of the Metropolitan's or the Museum of Modern Art's. As Naef explains it: "The Met has Stieglitz. The Modern has Atget. And the difference between the Met, the Modern and the Gerty will be that at its inception the Getty will have five or six collections that are equal to the single strengths of the Medern and the Met." Naef grins. "Which is rather extraordinary".

But of course it's not just the pictures themselves that have inspired the talk. Equally stunning. was the Getty's decision to assemble the works at all. For a museum suspected of being as conservative as it is wealthy, phoprobably found out that there are not many areas where you can come in and start collecting from scratch and hope to equal the major collections that already exist." Photography, he points out, has only been collected systematically for a decade or so. Before that art lovers bought plenty of pictures but weren't convinced of their lasting value. Naef, for one, never had a doubt. "Collective tastes and opinions that suddenly blow upon us have never been particularly reliable measuring sticks for longterm meaning," he says. "So I never personally took much stock in the doubts about the field when they were there. I was mildly amused that this attitude had begun to set in, but as far as I was concerned, I knew that these works would continue to hold magic and meaning for a long time to come."

How much all this will affect the photography market is another matter. The Getty purchase clearly gives the field a fresh glow of legitimacy. But according to New York Dealer Daniel Wolf, who single-handedly assembled the various collections, it's doubtful that prices will be dramatically affected. "When people are confident," he explains, "the mood changes, and there'll be more money in the field. But it won't really change the market. You need two big buyers to change a market, and the Getty won't even be one of them. There's very little it needs to add. Weston is going to have his hands full."

Teston Naef became curator of prints and photographs at the Met in 1970. Previously he had been a visiting scholar at the Boston Public Library, and director of the art gallery at Wheaton College. He received his B.A. from Claremont Men's College in 1964, his M.A. from Ohio State University two years later. He did postgraduate work at Brown in art history for the next three years. In the last decade he has written a number of books on photography, including The Collection of Alfred Stieglitz. Unlike many of his colleagues, Naef never wanted to be an artist himself. 'I knew I was very good at looking," he says. "And much better at looking than at making. I knew that right from the start."

Daniel Wolf believes that Naef is the only man with the talent and energy to take on the Getty project. The next months will certainly demand both. First, there'll be loose ends to tie up at the Met-not least of which is Naef's own role in helping choose his successor. Next comes the gathering of the Getty's new pictures from around the world. Naef will continue to look for acquisitions, though obviously with great discerament. He will not be purchasing contemporary works, but he does hope to establish ties with the Los Angeles County Museum of Art down the road. He is also determined to begin lending works as soon as possible. "We want this collection to be seen." Is he daunted? "Not a bit," he says. "I feel like the kid who dreams of the circus and finally runs away with it."

Poor U.S. Trade Results Boost Protectionist Drive

By LEONARD SILK

New York Times Service EW YORK - The dollar climbed again this week, smashing past records. According to Morgan Guaranty Trust, the dollar is nearly 26 percent above its average market rate between 1980 and 1982.

In July the United States set another record — it ran a trade deficit of $14.1 billion, the highest monthly figure in history. The record dollar and the record trade deficit are no coincidence; the first aggravated the second.

The slumping U.S. trade performance is intensifying protectionist pressures, and threatening to disrupt the world trading system. To be sure, the protectionist wave is by no means limited to the United States. After the successful completion of the problems, which are

Tokyo Round of trade negotiations in 1979, the world was hit by the second oil shock and deep recession that raised unemployment to 30 million in the Western industrial countries. World trade slumped, and nations that had pledged themselves to move toward more open trading relations began to move the other way.

As Jeffrey J. Schott, a former U.S. Treasury official, puts it:
"Despite annual pronouncements in support of open markets, all of the world's major trading countries unabashedly have clamped down against import competition. Autos, steel and textiles head a long list of industries that have successfully sought import re-straints in a multitude of countries in the five years since the end of the Tokyo Round."

Their protectionist actions have also been applied to the debtridden developing countries, thereby worsening the threat to the international financial system. A new study prepared by Mr. Schott for the Council on U.S. International Trade Policy, a nonpartisan research group, notes that 30 to 40 percent of the exports of non-oil-producing developing countries have been subjected to import restraints.

be unable to earn enough foreign exchange to service their international loans, and this has meant a continuing danger not only to the banks but also to U.S. businesses that depend heavily on developing countries as markets.

The Schott study notes that U.S. exports to the two largest debtor countries, Brazil and Mexico, have fallen by almost 50 percent since 1981, representing 30 percent of the total decline in U.S. exports during this period. Both countries were forced to restrict imports severely because of a lack of foreign exchange, and the lost exports to Brazil and Mexico alone have cost the United States an estimated 250,000 jobs.

The advocates of foreign trade—including not just economists hut husinesses concerned about their loss of markets and climbing costs—argue that protectionism is a bad answer, a self-defeating answer, to trade problems.

"The medicine is wrong," Doreen L. Brown, president of Consumers for World Trade, a Washington-based free-trade organization, said in an interview Wednesday, "Let industries solve their underlying problems, which are not imports. Let them cooperate on research. Let them produce more effectively. Meantime, government has a responsibility toward the unemployed workers, to improve worker training and relocation. But what industry does not need is a crutch."

Mrs. Brown notes that protection for the troubled steel industry is nothing new, and has done the industry no good. "Protection of steel goes back all the way to 1967," she says. She contends that the best way to help the steel industry is to stop protecting it

A large body of U.S. industrial and farm groups, including the American Soybean Association, Caterpillar Tractor Co., the Construction Industry Manufacturers Association, the National Grange and the Retail Industries Trade Action Coalition, spoke out this week against the recommendation of the International

Barlow Makes Bid For Bibby

Offer Is Valued At $358 Million

By Lynne Curry

International Herald Tribune
LONDON — Barlow Rand Ltd. South Africa's largest industrial company, has made a £280-million ($358-million) takeover bid for J. Bibby & Sons PLC, an animal feed

David Crowe, an analyst at Scott, Goff, Layton & Co., noted that the bid reflects the gradual trend among South African companies to diversify outside of the country.

In addition, Tiger Oats & National Milling Co., in which Barlow owns a 30-percent interest, has a 29 percent stake in Bibby. Mike Rosholt, chairman of Barlow, said Tiger Out's share and its willingness to be paid in South African rand were an additional incentive to take over Bibby.

Mr. Rosholt said Barlow would use Bibby as a springboard for further acquisitions in industry instead of agriculture, probably in the United States and Britain.

Under the terms of the agree ment, Barlow has already paid about £80 million to Tiger Oats in rand for its 29-percent share. This is 300 pence a share. Upon the sale by Bibby directors and relatives of their shares, Barlow's holdings will be about 34 respect be about 34 percent.

Fives-Lille said the plan, put to-gether late last month by a consortium of industrial and banking interests, had been compromised by its failure to find sufficient support among Creusot-Loire's employees and particularly its managers.

There have been widespread protests against the plan in Creusot-Loire's main center, the small town of Le Crensot near France's second-largest city, Lyon. The town hall has been occupied and even the French Democratic Labor Federation, a trade union normally close to France's Socialist government, has attacked the proposals. Fives-Lille and Framatome, a nuclear-reactor builder hitherto owned by Creusot-Loire, would have been the main shareholders in the new company.

An Encore by GEC Chief Is Awaited Some See New Takeovers

As Funds Top $2 Billion

By Barnaby J. Feder New York Times Service LONDON - Once you have changed the face of British industry, it's hard to find an appropriate

Nonetheless, there are plenty of people in the City of London and the financial community worldwide waiting for Arnold Weinstock's next

Lord Weinstock, a tailor's son whose business success got him knighted in 1970 and made a baron 10 years later, masterminded the overhaul of Britam's General Electric Co., building it into the unmatched giant of the British electrical engineering industry. Since Lord Weinstock became managing director of the faltering company in 1963, GEC has not only absorbed two large rivals, but has become an envied and imitated model of

has become an envied and imitated modes of industrial organization.

"He probably influenced Britain more than any other single businessman, not just by restructuring its chaotic electrical industry, but by providing a model for financial discipline and decentralization which others followed, "observed Anthony Sampson two years ago in "The Changing Anatomy of Distains" his material of the nation.

So what's next? Well, some expect a new round of takeovers. Lord Weinstock's soaring profits and his careful acquisitions and investment policy have left GEC with an accumulation of cash reserves of more than $2 billion in the fiscal year ended last

But Lord Weinstock, 60, is annoyed by all this speculation: "People think that you aren't doing anything unless you are buying something." he said in a recent telephone interview from his country home in Wiltshire, 100 miles (160 kilometers) west of London. "I see GEC as put together now. We have to secure growth. We also have to find a judicious mixture of prudence and boldness."

Despite all Lord Weinstock's protestations, The Times of London has described the question of when GEC will do something dramatic with its cash hoard as "one of the longest-running enigmas in the City."

Indeed, speculation in the City over Lord Weinstock's next move has been dampened only slightly by the news that GEC will seek its shareholders' permission at the annual meeting next Friday to spend as much as half its reserves on a share-repurchase plan, an investment strategy that has rarely been used here since changes in the tax laws in 1981 made it possible.

Lord Weinstock is still quite willing to throw GEC's weight around. That much was demonstrated in tate May after Thorn-EMI PLC announced that it hoped to merge with British Aerospace PLC, an aircraft and defense-equipment maker that is one of GEC's largest customers. Lord Weinstock responded by starting his own merger talks, confronting Thorn, a consumer-electronics and entertainment company, with the prospect of a hidding war with GEC. To no one's surprise, Thorn decided to drop the whole idea as soon as British Aerospace formally said it was not interested. And by the end of June, talk of a GEC hid for British Aerospace had also evaporated.

"Arnold Weinstock has a financial mind, but be's got that something extra you might call flair," said Lord Carrington, the former foreign minister who was GEC's chairman for a year before leaving in May to become the new secretary general of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization. "His mind works in an original, exhilarating way." Indeed, Lord Weinstock's flair, and the story of his rise at the company, have become the stuff of . British management legends. Raised by his elder brother after his parents died, he entered the London School of Economics at the age of 16, graduat-

Unemployment In U.S. Steady at 7.5% in August

By Jane Seaberry

WASHINGTON - The U.S. cisecutive month, the Labor Department reported Friday as what the Reagan administration ealls 'America's great job machine" ap-

The number of employed in August dropped 425,000, the department said, according to its survey of around 60,000 randomly selected households. However, another, usually more reliable, measure of employment, a survey of business payrolls that is not used in computing the employment rate, showed small job gains of 159,000 last

The unchanged rate in August followed a sharp drop in the unemployment rate in June from 7.5 percent to 7.1 percent and then an equal rise back to 7.5 percent in July, the rate in effect when President Ronald Reagan took office.

The White House, which during the election campaign has touted the economy's record-hreaking growth, said the unemployment figures were "encouraging" because they stayed stable.

The Reagan administration and many private economists have said they hoped the economy would slow somewhat from its frenctic pace during the beginning of the year to ensure that inflation would not accelerate and cut short the expansion.

Labor Department economists last month said that the sharp rise in unemployment in July could have been due to problems in adjusting the numbers for seasonal changes in employment patterns. On Friday, the Labor Departvilian uncomployment rate last month remained at 7.5 percent of the work force for the second contaking into account a larger than usual number of students who left jobs and returned to school.

However, she also said that it seemed clear that the economy was slowing down. "The unemploy-ment data for August, when taken together with those for July, sug-gest that employment growth has moderated from the rapid pace reg-istered earlier in the recovery," she

Andrew Brimmer, an economist said that the level of employment gains "seems to have stopped, by the household data." However, I added that blacks gained 185,000 jobs last month. Traditionally, blacks are the last hired in an ex-

He cautioned that the slowdown is not serious, but follows the usual cyclical pattern of robust growth at the beginning of a recovery, fol-lowed by smaller and smaller monthly job gains.

The number of unemployed remained virtually unchanged last month from the 8.5-million level in July and in May.

Jobiess rates for most major working groups were essentially unchanged, the Labor Department said. The rate for adult men declined from 6.5 percent to 6.4 percent, that for women rose from 6.9 percent to 7.1 percent and the rate for teenagers rose from 18,3 percent to 18,4 percent.

The unemployment rate for whites was 6.4 percent, and for Hispanies 10.7 percent, unchanged from July. The rate for blacks edged down to 16 percent from against late payments of all its loans to a specific country. Bank stock analysts said Thursday that they were intrigued by Citicorp's move, which came to light when a 10Q report, a legally required disclosure of information, was distributed to investors this week. Other major banks said they were studying Citicorp's action and would consider similar steps.

Although Citicorp declined to elaborate on the details of the policy, banking sources said the countries covered were Mexico, Brazil, Argentina, Venezuela and the Philppines. The policy was issued by

Dollar Continues Rising Against Major Currencies The Associated Press

NEW YORK - Pushed by rates in the United States, the U.S. dollar hit record highs in Europe and in New York against the French frane and British pound Friday. Foreign-currency dealers said the dollar stayed strong despite slightly lower interest rates for dollar deposits in Eu-rope, and a report that the U.S. jobless rate was unchanged at 7.5 percent in August. Dealers said another factor was that not many dollars were offered for sales on U.S. currency markets. In London, the pound fell to a record low of $1.2737, from Thursday's $1.2845. In Tokyo, the dollar rose to 244.55 Japaweek. **

Broffiets and a large institutional selling program disrapted an early rally as investors pulled their bide even though the bond market was staging a rally. Blue-chip issues were hard hit and failed to recover as some had hoped.

The Dow Jones industrial average, up 6 points at the outset after rising 9.83 Thursday, shed 11.48 to 1,207.38. The average surrendered 17 points for the week overall.

17 points for the week overall.

Declines led advances 874 to 611 among the 1,942 issue traded. Volume totaled 84.1 million shares, do in from 91.9 million traded Thursday.

Many investors were disturbed the market failed to follow through on Thursday's rally and several analysts were uncertain what the action was saying about the tuture.

Prices jumped at the outset when bonds rallied on the Federal Reserve's report late Thursday of a $700-million decline in the narrowest measure of the U.S. money supply, which should take pressure off interest rates.

Federal funds rates, which banks charge one another for overnight losns, dropped to 11 9/16 percent from 11 11/16 percent Thursday and 1114 percent earlier this week.

United Press Internal SEATTLE - The board of Pay 'n Save Corp., Washington's largest retail chain, agreed Friday to sell the company for $355 million to a group of investors led by New York-based Trump Group.

The agreement will be based on a tender offer of at least 51 percent of Pay 'n Save's shares outstanding at $22.50 a share. The offer is expected to begin in the next few days.

Julius and Edmond Trump led the group offering to buy the company. The proposed buyers also include Lamont Bean, 59. Pay're Save's the executive officer, E. Ronald Erickson, 53, chief operaring officer, and Calvin Hendricks, 51, chief financial officer.

Trump Group has refused to di-vulge the makeup and purpose of the company. The group has made several unsuccessful to buy several retailers, including Marshall Field & Co. of Chicago.

expected, it was nonetheless disturbing to investors, analysts said because Gould has been trying to convert from a maker of batteries and auto parts to a leading hightechnology company.
Gould, based outside Chicago in

Rolling Meadows, Illinois, waited until after the close of the stock exchange Wednesday to tell securities analysts at a meeting in New York that sales of Gould's chips for video games had dried up following last summer's collapse of the video game market

The company said sales of ROM. or read only memory, circuits be-gan to decline in early 1984 and saker, Gould's chairman and chief "disappeared" at midyear, when some important customers canceled contracts.

Gould also said it had lost the ousiness of a microcomputer makthough one institution were writing about another one of the town institutions.

Her chapter on the East End, the black side of town, is an odd mixture of good scenes and peopls —some of the best people in the book —and a hint of some of the smoky, hidden life there, but also a naiveté that will likely have her pronounced racist. In observing her East End, Santmyer is always affectionate, yet the reader is constantly aware of her position of privilege.

It is this quality of a rather innocent woman-child watching that informs Santmyer's memoir. Her good scenes are visible through a certain calm air, over distance, the way hot weather produces mi-rages down country roads. She writes of "when nothing moved in the length and breadth of the sunblazing streets, and only a few persons were to be seen in open shop doors or on the benches under the elms; when the trees themselves were limp, unstirring; when the tiled roof was red-hot against the sky, and the hands of the clock in the tower stood motionless at ten to three." And we wish for the shade of elms and arbor-covered porches. In Harlan's town just south of Xenia, and sometime around the time of the Depression, a young country schoolteacher named Roz McPherson went to the hotel there to meet Sinclair Lewis. Lewis, the disparager of Main Streets everywhere, was touring the Midwest with a play of his, and Main Street was in a retributive mood. McPherson waited until the great man finished breakfast and, as he arose, she said, "Good morning, Mr. Lewis."

"Shut up," he replied, and, as McPherson would succincily put it later, "That was how I met Sinclair Lewis."

It is not likely that Lewis played Xenia, for I believe that the opera house was already gone, but if he had, he might have met that other young schoolteacher, Santmyer, and he might have gracelessly told her the same thing.

Santinyer, however, being a "lady," would not have replied. She would have done just what she did: write "Ohio Town." Although some think otherwise, Lewis never wrote a great book about the midwestern small town. He did oot even write a modest one. Santmyer has written one that is modest, as she herself is, and for nonfiction these days, a small accomplishment is fine.

onslaught of it she has been plucky and funny, her head unturned.

"Ohio Town" is a more successful book than "Ladies." A nonfiction account of a small Ohio town in the early part of the century, it is told from the viewpoint of a child and through the references of a woman who chose to remain there. The town is. of course, Santmyer's home, Xenia, a town distinguished in recent years only by fate, in the form of a tornado that devastated the heart of it.

She writes about the town institutions — church, library, opera house, school - and her language is decorous, measured, and somewhat distant. It is as which is understandable for she, herself, has become

While her book requires patience, Santmyer is a better journalist than oovelist, and there are good, clear scenes that bring the fallow stretches to life. There is a chapter on the railroad, which ran down Xenia's principal street only feet from the opera house, where the locals lit the train's passing into the onstage drama, and through the detail in Sant-myer's observation and emotion, it becomes a good essay about the power of the train oo the imaginawhile she is more memoirist than historian, I think of her in the company of those good folk like Harlan, who struggled with their time and geograpby without much hope of reward or readership. Santmyer has suddenly found both, and under the

the Steelers' loss to Kansas City, threw a 6-yard touchdown pass to the rookie Louis Lipps in the first period and then sent Pittsburgh ahead for good with a 3-yard throw to another rookie. Weegie Thompson, in the

Buffalo Bills (0-1) at St. Louis

Cardinals (0-1) — Perhaps by now it has occurred to the management in St. Louis that the team's fortune rest every so often on the foot of Neil O'Donoughue. It was he who missed three field goals in that overtime game against the Giants last year that ended at 20-20. Last Sunday, he missed a 45-yarder that would have beaten the Packers and would have underscored a fine per-alignment in the second half, which worked well. The Patriots scored all their points in the first 22 minutes.

Angeles Rams (0-1) - The Browns

did nothing against Scattle last Monday, losing by 33-0. Every-thing was off, especially the offeo-sive line, which allowed Paul Mc-Donald to be sacked seven times.

That must come as good news to the Rams, whose defensive front is much better than Scattle's. The Rams' problem was offense. Erie

Dickerson rushed for 138 yards against the Cowboys, but the Rams mustered a total of only 66 more. A hard-charging rush and swift corare never good news for the Giants, especially now. Monday night the Dallas secondary shut down the

Rams' Vince Ferragamo, who com-

Simms bad a fine opener in the Giants' victory over Philadelphia, but he can expect more pressure from the Cowboys' defensive front and better coverage by their backs. Worse yet for the Giants, Gary Hogeboom, in his first start ever, set a Cowboy record with 33 com-

San Diego Chargers (1-0) at Se-attle Seahawks (1-0) — This is a key intradivision match, and one in which the Seahawks find themselves at a tremendous disadvantage. Out for the season is Curt Warner, the AFC's premier run-ning back a year ago and the cor-nerstone of Seattle's offense. His injury prompted the Seahawks to sien Franco Harris. Bear in mind that Harris is a fullback and not the slashing-type runner Warner is.

The Chargers, meanwhile, showed their typical pass-happy offense in squashing Minnesota, and the Sea-hawk defense probably isn't much better than Minnesota's. (San Die-

Mancini-Bogner Bout Is Called Off

NEW ORLEANS (Combined Dispatches) — The scheduled fight Saturday between Ray (Boom Boom) Mancini and Kenny (Bang Bang) Bogner was called off Thursday when Mancini's personal physician ruled that a cut over the left eye of the former World Boxing Association lightweight champion was likely to reopen.

"I think it's quite evident even any light hit is going to open this cut right away." Mancini's physician said, "It looks like a dotted line." He said it would take six weeks for the cut to heal completely.

"We work on the honor system over here. Before receiving an order a defense contractor must take an oath that he will not lie, steal or cheat in fulfilling his contract and must report anyone who does."

"That's very good, sir. But it's quite possible that lying, stealing and cheating may not be defined it. We're called the Defense Department because we have to defend every cent we ask for our weapons systems. Some of them work, many others don't. It's nobody's fault. But in order to protect ourselves from people who want to endanger our national security, we can't have anyone digging for waste and fraud in our budget. It makes us look as if we don't know what we're doing."

A Woman of Letters: Jeanne Foster and Friends

By Edwin McDowell

New York Timer Service
NEW YORK — The letter is dated Dublin, April 8, 1923, and it begins, Forgive me for typing this but I have pain in my eyes and so must spare them all I can." After reporting that two of his children have recovered from scarlet fever, the author added, "The only tribulation we suffer from civil war is that we are rather weary of being tied to the house."

The letter writer was W. B. Yeats, the Irish poet and playwright. He was writing to Jeanne R. Foster, who would die in 1970 at age 86 in Schenectady, New York, where she spent almost the last 40 years of her life in relative obscurity.
Yet, at the time Yeats wrote to her,

Foster was anything but obscure. Not only was she a renowned beauty, who at age 16 had appeared on the cover of Vanity Fair magazine, but she was also the author of several volumes of poetry and a well-known literary editor. For about two decades she had developed friendships with a wide circle of poets, authors and artists.

The flavor of many of those friendships is apparent from the 14 boxes of Foster letters, diaries, manuscripts and clippings recently acquired by the New York Public Library and housed in its Rare Books and Manuscripts Division.

The collection includes correspondence with Yeats, Ezra Pound and Ford Madox Ford (who in his memoirs described Jeanne Foster as a "ravishingly beautiful Jeanne Foster as a "ravishingly beautiful lady"); two pages of notes from an interview with James Joyce, during which he gave her a recipe "for an Italian way to cook artichokes," and a diary describing a two-day period in 1921 when, during a trip to Paris, she lunched with Pound, had dinner with the Romanian sculptor Constantin Brancusi and dined with Picasso at a riverside restaurant in Fontainebleau.

From 1910 to 1922, Foster was the literary editor of the Review of Reviews, an influential literary magazine. She became the American editor of the Transatlantic Review, the short-lived journal — founded that published Hemingway, Joyce and other promising young writers. Her books of verse include "Rock-Flower" and "Wild Apples," and she wrote two volumes of the promising young writers. stories about the Adirondacks.

The biggest single group of letters in the library collection is the 120 written by the father of W. B. Years — John Butler Years, the white-bearded painter and poet who lived for more than a dozen years in New York in a rooming house run by two sisters. "It was said in New York that John

Jeanne R. Foster

Butler Yeats 'revived the lost art of conversation," she wrote years later. "I have never yet heard his equal." They became such good friends that when the elder Yeats died in 1922, he was buried in the Foster family plot in Chestertown, New York, in the foothills of the Adirondacks. Jeanne Foster was even closer friends with John Quinn, an influential corporation lawyer and patron of the arts, whom she met in 1918 at the bedside of the ailing John Butler Yeats. Quinn had defended James Joyce's "Ulysses" in court, he owned the original manuscript of both "Ulysses" and T. S. Eliot's "The Waste Land," and he owned the largest and probably the greatest single collection of modern European art of this century. Jeanne Foster pur-chased some of that art for him during her travels to Europe with Quinn and on trips

All this time Foster was living with her invalid busband, Matlack Foster, a friend of ber family's who was older than her own father and whom she had married on her 17th birthday. He died in 1933.

John Butler Yeats

When Quinn died in 1924, he left Jeanne Foster 14 letters from W. B. Yeats, moreletters from John Butler Yeats and a postcard from James Joyce to Ezra Pound.

All these are in the library collection, along with most of Foster's own correspondence. This recent collection is an important companion to the 13-volume John Quinn Memorial Collection in the New York Public Library, which Foster edited and to which she wrote a 5,000-word introduction. Selections from that correspondence appear in "The Man From New York: John Quinn and His Friends" by B. L. Reid (Oxford, 1968).

"Jeanne Foster was not herself a major literary figure, but she was a quite good poet," said William B. Murphy, Thomas Lamont research professor of ancient and modern literature at Union College in Schenectady, and the biographer of John Butler Yeats. "And she was very important on the fringes of literature, because of her own accomplishments and because she was a friend of John Quinn's."

The library collection is officially titled

Collection, because one-third of the collection was donated by Foster and the remaining two-thirds were purchased from Murphy, to whom Foster bequeathed

"I knew Jeanne for 20 years of her life," Murphy said. "As a reward for agreeing to be a Democratic sacrificial lamb in a local election soon after I came to Schenectady in 1948, I was named one of five commissioners on the housing authority, and there was Jeanne Foster. Over the years she began to tell me about J. B. Yeats."

Several years after Ouinn's death, Foster moved to the large housein Schenectady that she had bought for her parents almost 20 years earlier with money she carned as 8 model. There, under the same roof with her husband, mother and father, brother and two sisters, she spent the remainder of her life, working as a counselor for the Schenectady Municipal Housing Authority from 1938 to 1955.

In October 1956, the year after she retired from the housing authority, she wrote to Ezra Pound, who was then in the 10th year of his 12-year confinement in St. Elizabeth's mental hospital in Washington.
"Dear Ezra," she wrote, "This is the long lost and forgotten Jeanne Foster writing. Immured as a social worker to support the various members of my family (now all deceased except one), I was vowed to silence. To bring back even to mind the friends and happiness of former years gave me such pain that I wrote no one."

In 1960, Foster was named Schenecta-In 1960, Poster was named Schenectady's senior citizen of the year. She occupied her remaining years as a member of several writers' organizations and environmental groups, and Murphy said she became deeply interested in spiritualism and the occult. The Pound's returned to Italy after Era Pound's discharge from St. Elizabeth's, and in 1661 December Board.

and in 1961 Dorothy Pound wrote to say that her husband was ill in a mursing home. Foster wrote back expressing sympathy and saying that she had donated Ezra's letters to the Houghton Library at Harvard University. "I wish I could see you and Ezra," she added. "The Paris days, those enchanted years, were so wonderful. I have enchanted years, were so wonderful. I have the photograph of Joyce, Quinn, Ford and Ezra in my living room."

By now she was virtually alone, for in 1963 she wrote again to Ezra Pound, say-ing, "I do not have a living relative; I have outlived them all.

Pound hung on until 1972, when he was 87, leaving behind a reputation as one of the most influential and controversial figures in 20th-century poetry. Jeanne Foster, scarcely remembered, died two years earli-She was buried in the Foster family plot, alongside John Butler Yeats, who had gone to his rest almost half a century earlier.

Armstrong and Hillar Plan Trip to North Pole

The first man on the moon and the first man to climb Mount Everest are planning to go to the North Pole together. Sir Edmand Hillery said Thursday that he and the former American astronaut Neil Arastrong plan to visit the North Pole sometime next year. Sir Edmund 65, hopes the going will be some what easier than when he became the first man to scale Everest in 1953, and when he completed in overland crossing of the Antarctic to the South Pole in 1958. He and Armstrong, who walked on the moon in 1969, will be flown to the Pole by a travel company as promotion for a new North Pole adventure tour. Sir Edmund said: I would not involve the hard work of the other expeditions I have been on, so it should be very enjoyable.

To reduce her property taxes: 2 British woman, Rose Stevensia 68, took drastic action: She is duced her house. She hired tijo teen-agers with sledge-hammen who demolished the roof and fop floor of her 12-room Victoria house in the south London subth house in the south London subth of Croydon, before being stopped by police. "Our officers couldn't believe their eyes," David Mahing, a planning officer of Croydon Council, said. "The road is a prime example of Croydon's Victoria past and we have told Mrs. Steven. son to reinstate the property."

Jean Harris, convicted of he 1980 murder of Dr. Herman Tannower, was released Thursday from the bospital where she had been reated for a heart attack and was returned to prison, a hospital spokesman said. Harris, '61, indicate the Westchester Comp.
